Dear BETA Members,

As we stand at the threshold of BETA’s 30th jubilee, we are filled with a profound sense of pride and gratitude. For three decades, the Bulgarian English Teachers’ Association has been moulding educators’ perspectives, cultivating an appreciation for language, literature, and learning. Today, as we gather to celebrate this special occasion, we find ourselves both proud and humbled by the positive change we believe we have brought about and the impact we have collectively made on educators’ mindset.

It all started with a vision - a vision to create a community of educators dedicated to the art of teaching English, and to inspire one another through shared knowledge and experiences. Over the years, we have progressed through the dynamic landscape of education, adapting our methodologies to meet the constantly changing needs of our students. We have explored innovative teaching approaches, embraced new technologies, globalization and cultural diversity, while holding on to the timeless values that lie at the heart of education. Together, we believe, we have been a force for positive change, creating generations of lifelong learners and critical thinkers.

We would like to express our sincere gratitude to all those who have supported the Bulgarian English Teachers’ Association throughout the years - it is owing to each of you that BETA established itself as a space where ideas flourish and every voice is valued. By commemorating this jubilee anniversary, we celebrate not just the years passed but also the years to come. The Bulgarian English Teachers’ Association will preserve its role as a torchbearer of progress and inspiration, so that to stay a respected community for educators across the country. Together, let us embark on the next thirty years with enthusiasm and determination, knowing that our collective efforts can make a difference!

Thank you for being part of this remarkable journey. Happy 30th anniversary to the Bulgarian English Teachers' Association!

With warm regards,

BETA Committee

She has been heavily involved with the running of TESOL Macedonia-Thrace, Northern Greece and she is the current Secretary General of the Board of Trustees of IATEFL.

Plenary talk: The Future of EFL Classroom: How reflective practitioners empower learners

What will learning look like in the next few decades? How will these changes impact teacher education and our perceptions of what ‘learning’ and ‘teaching’ are? What are the new roles of teachers as reflective practitioners and how will learners become self-regulated? If you want answers, come to the session!

Zarina Markova

Zarina Markova is a language teacher educator at the South West University, Blagoevgrad, where she teaches Language Acquisition and ELT Methodology, supervises teaching practice and conducts state teacher certification examinations. For different periods in her life, she was British Council teacher trainer, member of BETA-IATEFL Committee, BETA’s Official Representative in the SEETA community and academic adviser to the SEETA Small-scale Teacher-led Research Project, and editor of BETA-IATEFL Publications. In all these roles, Zarina has been trying to create conditions for ‘pedagogised’ creativity, i.e. personal and social creativity that can emerge, and be enhanced, in the context of effective and meaningful English language teaching and teacher training.

Plenary talk: ELT confidence: Friend or foe?

Research repeatedly confirms that people with high self-confidence are perceived as more knowledgeable, more attractive, more likely to set higher goals for themselves and to stay motivated in the face of difficulty. Findings additionally suggest that teachers with high self-confidence are more enthusiastic to teach, more willing to experiment and more committed to teaching. Do studies of ELT confidence reveal similar results? How do English language teachers build their confidence? Can self-confidence be harmful and self-doubt beneficial? This talk will provide some answers.

Vanya Katsarska is a senior lecturer at the Bulgarian Air Force Academy. She is in charge of planning, delivering and assessing general English and specialized English language courses for BSc cadets and civilian students. She has also been a member of a couple of international groups of ESP teachers, developing and implementing needs-driven ESP courses throughout Europe. Her areas of expertise include curriculum and syllabus development, ESP assessment and aviation English.

Plenary talk: For whom the bell tolls

We are living in times of big changes and unprecedented challenges in all sectors - from business, industry, healthcare, and politics to academia. Education was not spared the covid-19 pandemic or the national economic crises. Chat GPT and other AI tools have suddenly gone mainstream and nowadays we are wondering if they will disrupt or boost language teaching. Gen Z and Alpha need to be equipped with knowledge, skills, and the right attitudes to be fully capable of participating and contributing to their societies. As a result of this 21 century has brought new challenges to us, EFL teachers. We are now required to teach not only the English language but also the skills of the 21 century.

The talk will address the 21st century skills and how language teachers could teach them. Furthermore, the talk will provide an insight into the roles relevant to today’s English language teachers.

Cooperation in education becomes more vital than ever. That is why BETA conference is an important event. It gathers a vibrant community of enterprising educators from different countries. During these two days we will discuss various methods and tools that promote a successful and effective EFL learning and we will share EFL research and projects. Together we may find solutions to some pressing issues.

However, teaching EFL is not only finding the right method or technique. Use your own unique power to make students think who they might become. Use your own strengths to help them make the best of their own strengths. You feel great because then you touch your students’ lives and they touch yours. The future of our children, teenagers and young adults is in the hands, brains and hearts of their teachers. So, don’t ask for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for thee.

English as a Lingua Franca in the ULL
The presentation focuses on the use of English as a Lingua Franca in the context of ULL (urban linguistic landscape) in commercial areas of Bulgarian cities. Examples of the use of English and other language combinations have been provided and analyzed with an emphasis on the probable reasons why English has been chosen as a language of communication in public spaces. Types of different Language combinations, dominance of certain language(s) and some linguistic errors have been analyzed, too.

Reflections on having taught TEFL for over 50 years. (Sharing is caring).
I’m an 87-year-old Englishman who taught TEFL at various levels in 5 countries from 1961 to my retirement in 2000 and beyond including talks/workshops at conferences in 7 or 8 countries including Bulgaria (Sofia). Although acutely aware of the threats to the world we live in, caring remains sharing, and in my presentation I wish to offer some insights and recommendations applicable to TEFL gathered from a long career.

Differences between ESP and EGP according to students and lecturers
The presentation aims to outline some major differences between English for specific purposes and English for general purposes according to first-year students of economics (and management) taught in English at UNWE – Sofia, Bulgaria, and business English lecturers at the same academic institution. On the basis of the presented survey results, some inferences can be drawn, which, if taken into consideration, could lead to the enhancement of ESP teaching and learning.

Techniques on adapting materials for developing the speaking skill
Although the skill of speaking is necessary for attaining basic interpersonal communicative skills (BICS), most traditional second language acquisition programs base their pedagogy and curriculums on lexis and grammar of the written form and phonology/phonetics. The purpose of this presentation is to demonstrate how to effectively adapt content-specific materials for developing the speaking skill at community colleges with adult students who are interested in pursuing a career in the wine industry as a sommelier. Courses for becoming a sommelier or a server in the wine industry are traditionally offered at community colleges under the culinary arts and hospitality management programs, but not typically in conjunction with ESL department course offerings. This presentation demonstrates how adapted readings of a Sommelier prep course can be turned into authentic dialogues in action for developing the speaking skill.

The new pedagogic approach of foreign language teaching
The aim of the presentation is to present recent trends in foreign languages teaching with a special focus on the approaches which help to improve the quality of learning, and motivate the learner to be more independent, responsible and more collaborative. English Language Teachers prepare and encourage students in a rapidly changing world and motivate through creative teaching and pedagogy. Language is closely linked to culture and in our interactions with others, we use language not only to refer to or represent our socio-cultural worlds. It is also the central means by which we bring our cultural worlds into existence, maintain them, and shape them for our own purposes. Creative teachers tend to promote thinking skills with their students while teaching the content. Teachers ought to attempt to promote critical thinking at every stage of learning, since critical thinking represents a powerful resource and it motivates learners to acquire new knowledge or skills. The new pedagogic approaches aim at allowing learners to develop greater flexibility and awareness on communicative, linguistic, and learning levels needs.

The role of learners’ gender in VLS use
A significant amount of research has been directed towards showing that independent and self-aware learners employ numerous vocabulary learning strategies, signalling a positive effect on their linguistic abilities and by extension their lexicon. Individual learner characteristics have been extensively associated with learning outcomes. This paper emphasizes the role of learner’s gender showing that female learners are prone to using metacognitive, cognitive, memory and determination strategies more frequently than male learners.

Teachers’ role as instructors and facilitators in the use of VLS
Interpreted from learner-centered model perspective, this paper suggests that learners’ perception about vocabulary learning strategies is vital, however only if adequately guided and motivated, indicating that teachers’ role should not be neglected at all. The statistical results showed that frequency, as well as variety of VLS are indeed responsible for learners’ sizeable vocabulary, however less favoured and time-consuming memory and cognitive strategies should be elicited as more directly effective.

Foreign language teaching from the point of view of language contact
When it comes to foreign language teaching, what is inevitable, apart from the plethora of methods, is language contact. In my opinion, awareness of language contact on the part of the teacher is without doubt necessary irrespective of learners’ level and needs. An example that I have encountered is [spɔ:k] for ‘spoke’ where language contact between Bulgarian and English is clearly illustrated. Since diphthongs are not typical of Bulgarian, this particular learner replaces the second element of the diphthong in ‘spoke’ by lengthening the first element, which could be termed compensatory lengthening. The example also serves as proof that the speaker knows on some abstract level that the vowel in this monosyllabic word requires two X positions (in the parlance of the X-bar theory according to which two X positions are assigned to long vowels and diphthongs), and behaves accordingly by producing a long vowel. This modest paper adduces further examples which bring to the fore awareness of language contact in the above specified context.

Linking classrooms across borders through English
The pandemic resulted in teachers and students being connected through the internet with a lot of teaching and learning on-line. For most it was a new and difficult period involving quite a lot of work, although not everyone disliked every aspect of it. Nick Bilbrough's "Hands Up Project" started before the pandemic and linked schools in Gaza with the rest of the World through ZOOM. SOL has watched this closely and realised what possibilities it has to link two classrooms in any two different countries together in ENGLISH! This presentation will share some of the ideas generated as well as to how this could be offered more widely to teachers interested in having such a link with a school in another country. It is a perfect way of sharing one language!!!

Generation Z – Factors contributing to the development of foreign language anxiety Foreign language anxiety (FLA), a situation–specific type of anxiety, is one of the most significant barriers to progress in foreign language learning. It occurs in learners of all age categories; however, individuals during adolescence are at a greater risk of developing it. In addition to developmental factors, relevant characteristics of Generation Z can also be considered factors contributing markedly to FLA. Drawing on theoretical and empirical research, the present article discusses these factors to help teachers better understand their adolescent learners and adapt language teaching to their needs.

Creating and Adjusting the Lessons Content to Students’ needs
The nowadays challenges and difficulties the educational systems worldwide are facing, are an opportunity for educators to change teaching approaches for achieving greater outcomes and for responding to students' needs. Despite the use of the term ‘CLIL’ in educational institutions worldwide, oftentimes the teachers are not yet aware of the fact that Content Based learning can be a more efficient approach for educating the future generation. This proposed session offers the participants the possibility to explore different approaches for creating and adjusting the curriculum content to the students' needs and interests. The examples used within the session will be for teachers of English mainly. The session would help the teachers participating in the workshop, explore and develop different task-based exercises for their students, using a recent article that is of high interest for the students. By the end of the workshop, the participants will gather a set of exercises that can be practised in class, with students of different levels. Plus to that, the participants will be provided with a full range of tools that can be easily adaptable to different lesson objectives.

Potentialities of using travel writing as a resource in the ESP classroom
Drawing on genre theory and the increasing genre-blending in media texts, the paper highlights the phenomenon of digitally induced re-medialization in travel writing. This evolutionary development in travel writing reestablishes the presence of authentic immediate accounts of travel experiences in daily human communication – a pool in which language learners enthusiastically immerse themselves via the new media. Taking social constructivism as its second vector, the paper discusses travel writing as a mediatized resource for making sense of the world while simultaneously blurring the social structures underlying the communicative act of travel writing. A discussion of recently published travelogues about Bulgaria focuses on the construction of heritage and enhances awareness of the instrumentality of genres.

Development of 21st century skills in EFL classrooms

Transversal competencies (TCs) are interdisciplinary skills that are essential to be developed by students in any area of education. Soft skills or 21st century skills are indispensable for success in their personal and professional lives, to be responsible citizens and face various challenges in our modern globalized world (UNESCO, 2013; UNICEF, 2019). According to CEFR for Pluralistic Approaches to Languages and Cultures (Council of Europe, 2001, 2012, 2018), TCs should be addressed in teaching and learning of foreign languages, with a special focus on language and communication, multilingualism and multiculturalism, critical and innovative thinking, interpersonal and intrapersonal skills, global citizenship, media and information literacy. This study examined the views of future EFL teachers in Cyprus regarding TCs and whether EFL teachers should focus on transversal skills while teaching in EFL classes. Among the most vital TCs are critical thinking, creativity, communicative skills, ability to learn independently or critically evaluate information and media content. Such activities as presentations, taking discussions, debates and role plays can be useful in TCs development.

Cleared for take-off: from authentic tasks to communicative classroom activities
One of the primary functions of English for Specific Purposes (ESP) is to prepare graduates for professional success. Unfortunately, ESP language is often taught in isolation and there is no strong connection between the real world professional tasks and the classroom learning tasks. This presentation will focus on a change of perspectives and the adoption of a methodology which addresses authentic communicative needs and a professional competence-based approach. The presentation will be structured as an interactive hands-on session. The audience will be offered to participate in some sample learning tasks which demonstrate how students need to focus on the meaning of the language, engage their speaking skills, rely on their professional competence, engage their intercultural and interactive competence in order to complete the tasks efficiently and successfully. The presentation will comprise a warm-up game which trains paraphrasing and giving definitions; a chair flight which practices the aviation phraseology; and the instructions to a mini-meeting which helps students improve their listening comprehension, their fluency and accuracy, their interactive and critical thinking skills. These aviation activities can be tailored to the specific needs of most ESP teachers.

MATERIALS EXHIBITION: FOYER, both conference days
Dear BETA conference participants and members,

BETA 2024 Conference will be held in Shumen on 28th and 29 September 2024. Shumen and the region attract visitors with their history, mystery, natural charm and radiant people. Two ancient Bulgarian capitals — Pliska and Preslav — are located just 25 km away from the city. Shumen fortress overlooks the city and Shumen Plateau Nature Park is Shumen Plateau — the highest plateau in the Danube plain. Madara Horseman, a monument which is an early medieval UNESCO World Heritage site, is 15 km away of Shumen and dates back to the reign of Khan Tervel. Some of the oldest educational institutions in the country were established in Shumen over 150 years ago as the city was a centre of intense cultural activity during the Bulgarian Revival (Renaissance).

Language is the foundation of culture and culture is the canvas of history, so we hope to prepare the canvas of the education of the future together with you.

We are looking forward to seeing you in Shumen next year.
